For teenagers like Steve, music is an important part of life. Music is social; it brings people together at parties and concerts. Fast and loud music is full of energy; it helps people forget their problems and have fun.

But there can be a negative side to rock music as well. Dr. A. Handforth has some ① worries. "Music on stereos is often too loud," she says. "It can hurt your hearing. Also, other people on buses and trains may not want to listen to your music. Personal stereos stop you from thinking about the world outside. Headphones make you care only about yourself. And, of course, the biggest problem is drugs. There is a strong connection between some kinds of music and young people taking drugs."
